Tonight's Special Guest

Toni Mount MA

They Dared to be Doctors

In the Victorian age when married women were expected to stay at home and care for their families a few independent ladies were determined to have careers of their own. Prevented from entering the professions or even attending university, they overcame exclusion and discrimination to succeed in a man's world. This talk looks at the lives and careers of the first pioneering women to formally qualify as doctors and open-up universities and the professions to women.

Toni Mount is an author and novelist specialising in the ordinary lives of fascinating characters from history. She has written several successful non-fiction books including the Amazon best-seller, Everyday Life in Medieval London. Her historic novels include Victorian and medieval murder-mysteries and her detailed knowledge of these periods help her create believable characters and realistic settings.
